- ALYTUS is the largest town in Southern Lithuania and the sixth largest town in Lithuania. Abundant with forests and verdurous hills, Alytus is divided by a 16 km winding stretch of the Nemunas River. The lands of Alytus are spread on both banks of the Nemunas River. It is said that Alytus was named after the Alytupis runlet that runs by the mound side. Alytus was mentioned for the first time in 1377 in historical chronicles. On the 15th of June of 1581, the King of Poland and the Grand Duke of Lithuania Steponas Batoras granted Alytus the city rights according to the Magdeburg law. Along with the city rights, Alytus introduced its coat of arms and enjoyed self-governance. The town has a population of about 56 000.
- Alytus Mound is a historical and cultural monument and today there is a group of sculptures called the Ancestors of Alytus Mound at its foothill.
- The Town Garden is located in the very centre of downtown Alytus. It is famous for its rosary, which was started in the thirties of the last century.
- The “Angel of Freedom” monument was built for the first time in 1929 to commemorate the first decade of the Lithuanian independence.
- A memorial called “Quiet Bell” was dedicated for commemoration of the nation's torment. The memorial is designed to honour state prisoners and exiles, partisans of Dainava district as well as the Lithuanian army rebels of June 22-28, 1941.
- The Youth Park is located among springy brooks and it is distinct from other parks with its accumulation of metal plastic sculptures. The Youth Park attracts people with recreations and sports grounds, playgrounds and cycling tracks.
